

Matt Wilka, FSG

Matt is a Consultant in the education practice of FSG – a nonprofit consulting firm specializing in research, strategy, and evaluation. At FSG, Matt has advised foundations, corporations, multilaterals, and nonprofits, with a particular focus on improving education quality in the U.S. and globally. Recent projects have included building a regional collaborative to improve college readiness and success in the Rio Grande Valley, developing a social engagement strategy for a multinational textbook publisher, and supporting a regional foundation to adapt its education investments to the future of learning.

In addition to strategy development, Matt speaks and writes frequently on education topics. Recent publications have included a series of case studies on blended learning for the Michael & Susan Dell Foundation, and a report on building the capacity of the community college sector written for the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation.

Before joining FSG Matt served as a Fulbright Fellow in Ecuador, where he consulted to a large alternative public school system, and also managed programs for a Boston nonprofit that works to share best practices among charter and district schools. Matt holds a BA in English from Williams College.
